

Election 2022 work ends

The Voter Services team leaned into the end of the election cycle this year with three additional events: two at Washburn University and one at the YWCA. We had meaningful conversations with people and gave them information about ballot initiatives. Some of us used Voter-to-Voter to help track our progress in making personal connections with others about voting. Some put on their shoes and paid visits to their voting neighbors. Many of us spent more than 13 hours on election day helping our community vote. Our work allows us to personally connect with others.

Empowering Voters. Defending Democracy. One voter at a time.

Autumn is here. How fitting that we vote in November to reap the bounty of the seeds we have sown and tended all spring and summer long. Finally, election day is here and then bang-o presto, it's gone. All that work. All that preparation, and it's gone. Was it enough? Should we have done more?

Whether the elections resulted in the specific outcomes you hoped for, I hope you enjoyed the work this year. We were able to help our friends and neighbors become more civically engaged and just a little closer to understanding how all these local decisions affect their lives.
